Presentations:

9:20 am Kahtehrón:ni Iris Stacey

Kahtehrón:ni Iris Stacey has been involved in language revitalization for many years. Taking on several roles along the way, Kanien'kéha has been an asset in a variety of roles from immersion teacher to programs coordination and most recently in doing Onkwéhonwehnéha research.

9:45 am Tsohahí:io Lauren Diome

Mother of 3 children. Currently work as Kanien'kehá:ka Curriculum consultant at the Kahnawà:ke Education Center. Worked as an Onkwéhonwe'néha teacher on and off, following graduating the 1st Kanien'kéha Ratiwen-nahní:rats Literacy Program in 2003. Worked in different capacities at various schools in the community. Main driving force behind what I do is the survival of Onkwéhonwe'néha tánon tsi niionkwarihò:ten ne lonkwanonhsión:ni.

10:10 am Kanento:kon Hemlock

Kanien'keha language, culture and history teacher. Haudenosaundee External Relations Committee Co-chair. Member of the Great Law of Peace Recital Committee. In the process of completing Masters in Indigenous Language Revitalization.

10:35 am Jessica Coon

Linguists are interested in understanding the uniquely human capacity for language, and address questions like: what do all human languages share in common? What are the ways in which they differ from one another? And what do properties of human languages tell us about human cognition more generally? In this presentation, Jessica Coon will discuss her research with speakers of Indigenous Mayan languages spoken in southern Mexico and Guatemala, the importance of language diversity, and some of the ways in which tools from linguists can be used to support Indigenous languages

11:00 am Sandra-Lynne Leclair

History graduate student at McGill University. Currently works in the Social Studies Curriculum (and education technology) Consultant – working mainly on updating KSS social studies curriculum. Uses language knowledge to analyze early Haudenosaunee/Iroquoian language documents written by the Jesuits. Works on Indigenous history; including Kahnawà:ke history, historical linguistics, and historical memory.
